the Fountain Hotel Light street. Dear Sir : Being on the point of leaving the city avail myself of a few idle moments to thank yes tindly for the medicine you sent me, and which here certored me to the use of my limbs. I beg you to end me four bottles more, to earry on my voyage. table Plasture my confidence is so strong that, in gratitude to the proprietors of mid medicine, I beg on to present my response to them, and induce hem to make it more publicly known as a sure Aheumasic cure. Having called on me on the 18th of April last, and seen me prostrated on my bes, seles in all my limbs, you can appreciate nearly as well as myself the prompt relief I received from or. Hampton's Tincture, and I am positive had it dons I should still have been in bed. It is really a pity this specific should not be aproved by medical men, and like all patent drugs it should suffer the imputation the public generally give to such preparations. I mycelf, who was all ways opposed to a patented specific, took this medione with reluctance, and without confidence in it and it was only through your disinterested, friendly recommendations, and my critical situation that in laced me to try this really beneficial Vegetable not been for your strong and foreible recommends.

You may inform Mesers. Mortimer & Mewbray that they are at liberty to make use of my name i Vegetable Tincture, as it has cured me in five weeks of a chronic Inflamenatory Rheumatiem, contracted under tropical climates, and of seven years' periodical deration. I have only used three bottles, and find that even the deformed parts of my hands are fast returning to their former natural appearance I have been under the treatment of several phy Science in London and Paris, without any appearent benefit; also, while in New York, having tried the Phompsonian and Semospathic remedies, after having been tormented with galvanie besteries, cold and aromatic baths, and hundreds of internal and external medicines, all to no effect, I am, so far, sured by this Hampton's Vege able Tineture only Therefore, my dear sir, accept of the assurance of my gratitude, and believe me your well wisher. A LONDON GAMBLING MOUSE. ITS INNER LIFE.

A little volume has recently been pub lished in London, entitled "My Haunts." which contains some very light and agreeable reading, The following description of a celebrated gambling house. would doubtless apply in several respects to many of a similar character in our ow city, so far as its fittings up and its habitues are concerned. To be sure we have no "broken-down noblemen," or "idiotie guardsmen" as hangers-on at our feshionable hells, but there is a class of ancient "merchant princes" and "fast young men" who well supply the places of their more aristecratic European prototypes But to the sketch.

"Come, we have reached the aristo cratic neighborhood of St. James sereet and yender house—that one with the bright fanlight ever the door-is the scene of our intended visit. De you see those two pelice censtables, one on either side of the accrway? Some years ago the son of an eminent statesman, recent ly deceased, lost a very large sum money in one of those places, and since that time the doors of all suspected ganing houses have been watched by the po lice. They are supposed to take an ac curate account of the number of persons who enter, their style, and apparent position in life.

"They wish us 'good night' as we pull the ivory knob communicating with a spring bell that does not make the usual clatter, but sounds only once; and for that 'good night' you will, if you win, give half a crown as you emerge into the cold grey light of morning. The sergeant passing on his rounds will see you the establishment. slip the coin into the hand of his subor | "Occasionally-perhaps once in six door is opened by an unseen hand, and and the captives are discharged." our entry is immediately closed behind us. We find ourselves faced by a second door, pacelled with iron, and covered with green baize, with a small aperture in the centre, at which a gleaming eye appears. I am recognized; an iron bar is swung back, two bolts withdrawn, and having ascended a flight of most softly carpeted stairs, we stand within the walls of a London gambling house.

"You will observe that the first floor is that portion of the house in which play is carried on. The basement may be tailor's or bootmaker's shop. The mys teries of the upper regions has never been penetrated; but the drawing-room contains the real Lares and Penates of the proprietors. And very handsome rooms they are; brilliantly lighted, warmly curtained, and plentifully mirrored Look at the table spread out in the back room, and covered with cold fowl, ham, tongue, beef, and salads; these, with wines, spirits, and cigars, are provided gratuitously. Indeed, the more you drink the better pleased are your hospitable entertainers. "Let us push through this lot of men lounging in the doorway, and discussing racing matters—what an odd thing it is that your horsy-doggy kind of men al ways congaegate in doorways!-and make our way to the play table. This, you will observe, is an ordinary billiard table, furnished with pockets, cushions, &c.: and yonder, in the corner, stands a rack of cues-an arrangement which has been adopted recently, in consequence of the frequent visits of the police. And now let us look round at the company.

"That tall, dark man, standing at the centre of the table, is one of the proprietors of the house, and a handsome, dashing Israelite he is. He is very rich, always dresses to perfection, and, but beside being the owner of two or three racers, keeps a cabriolet and a mail pheeton-in one or the other of which you may see him nearly every afternoon in the Park; and you seldom go down to dine, either at the Crown and Sceptre at Greenwich, or the Star and Garter at Richmond, on a Sunday, without finding his 'trap' at the door during some portion of the evening. Idiotic guardsmen, would-be aristocratic stock-jobbers, green hands from the universities, and fast youths about town, have paid for that vehicle, and honest Moss gives them a subdued, but intelligent nod of recognition, as he drives in it.

"The sharp looking, wiry little man, opposite to him, is the croupier. He calls the odds, and never makes the alightest miscalculation; sees that the proper sums are staked at a single glance. and helps his principal to pay the winners and sweep up the stakes of the losers. For this latter purpose they do not use rakes, such as you may have seen at Wiesbaden or Aix, but small booked sticks. The rakes would be too preinterruption; and, moreover, from the unluckily chipped a fine table of the size of the table, are not required.

"Seven's the main !" shouts that tall bland, moustached, handsome man taking up the box.

"Seven's the main!" repeats the croupier, 'make up your game, please; the castor's backing in at seven, gentlemen ! Down comes the bex-out roll the dice. Eleven's the nick, says the croup er and stakes are swept up, winners paid, and a fresh main called with inconceivable rapidity. That man with the dice box in his hand is the type of a certain class. He is of excellent family, holds a commission in the household brigade, and is of those fellows you see everywhere. Driving a drag full of other solemn and moustached heavies to the Derby; leaning against the orchestra at the opera, and examining the house by the aid of his enormous lorgaette; bestriding a yourself in der pest blace."

beautiful borse in the park, or ponderonsly walte at Almack's he is always about." He does not come here for the purpose of increasing his income, or even for the mke of excitement. He has to pass the house on his way home from his club, and having the berror of going to bed, looks in merely to pass another hour.

" Of a very different stamp is the man next to him-the old militaire, with the tightly-buttoned frock-coat, well clipped gray whiskers, and carefully brushed hat. They call him 'the General,' for he is an old Indian officer, with a small annuity, to which he largely adds by a systematic method of play. He is a regular attendant here; is never ruffled or put out; and is reckoned to win, on an average, three sovereigns a night. I have met him in the day time, walking with a graceful, attractive looking girl, apparently h s daughter or niece, and I have wendered whether she had any notion of "That heavy-eyed, dissipated locking man, in the brown great-coat, was once one of the gayest spirits at Cambridge. Brought up to the church, he conceived a violent disgust for a quiet life, and determined on entering the army. Play. that dreadful demen which had cast a cloud over his otherwise brilliant college career, pursued him still : he became irretrievably involved, and was at length compelled to sell his commission. Since then he has existed, once can scarcely tell how; but from the terms on which he appears to live with the proprietors, and from the fact that he is always seen about here - the first to risk his few shillings at the commencement of the evening -he is believed to be an employe, or what is commonly termed a 'bonnet' of

They left him to rest, after the long fever of his troubled dream of life was over, in an humble and sequestered grave, beneath two stately pines. There let him sleep on! The gloom of their shade, and the melancholy sighing of the wind through their boughs, are fit emblems of the life which was breathed out in sadness and too late for the Liverpool packet. He exposed himself to the inclemency of the weather, took cold, which aggravated his disease, and hastened its fatal termination. He was put to bed-his deathbed-in his lodgings at the City Hotel. The idiosyncracies which had, of late years especially, marked his demeanor. distinguished the last hours of his life. The sudden bursts of petulence which disease wrung from him; the affecting kindness and tenderness which disease could not wholly take from him; the rambling conversation in the intervals of acute suffering, in some passages, as brilliant as ever-the last gleams of the sinking lamp; the greanings of remores which a review of his past life, at the bar of a stern seif-judgment, drew from his contrite heart; the fervid prayer; the heaitating hope; the trust qualified by selfcondemnation, in the Saviour whose name he professed; the concluding act ere the curtain fell upon the last scene of carth, propped up by pillows, he called witnesses to his confirmation of his will, providing for the freedom and support of his slaves, and the last conscious words. which fired his eye and braced his sinking frame, as, speaking in this connection, he laid his skeleton hand strongly upon the shoulder of his faithful servant.
